摘要

This article tried to apply the hypotheses of “success breeds failure” and “failure stimulates change” in organizational theory to describe the dialectical relation between democratization on Taiwan and Kuomintang’ s organizational change. This article argues that the success of Kuomintang obstructed the democratization of Taiwan, and the decline of Kuomintang followed the development of democracy. After losing regime, Kuomintang started the engineering of organizational change, and may appear of democratization of Kuomintang and Taiwan simultaneously.
