摘要

Fortunetelling to forecast the traces of a person's life is part of Chinese traditional thinking and culture. It has certain value and meaning in the research of Chinese culture and social sciences. This research enables cross-examination between "theory" and "certified actual cases" and tries to establish a theoretical model and effectively prove the reality of such actual practices. Based on the said fortunetelling forecasting model of "Eight Characters," we hope to provide managers with the capability to forecast traces of their own lives, which would help them know what is at stake and should be done. Or they may use this model as reference in choosing talents.

The results of this research has also attested that the forecast of good or bad on traces of life deduced by causal relations confirmed by basic fortunetelling model of "Eight Characters" is with high conformity with traces of life of actual individual cases. It seems that good "result" can be deduced from good "cause" (namely good fortune). There is high dependence between cause and result.
